Terrorism and Scepticism

With close to 200, mainly Australian tourists, murdered on the Indonesian island of Bali, "Bomber" Bush has been quick to blame al-Qa'eda for the attack. The Indonesian government and its tourist board are under severe pressure to capture anyone who can be blamed for the attack. Given Indonesia's appalling reputation for its lack of human rights, it will not be long before somebody is tortured into "confessing" to the crime. Probably "suspects" who have been named by the American CIA, having an alarming influence in the country

But who stands to gain the most from such an attack?

The US is desperate for Australia to join Bush's "fight against global terrorism". The C4 explosive allegedly used in the attack is manufactured for the US forces in the United States.

Also, there was the mysterious attack on a French oil tanker. Again al-Qa'eda was blamed by the US. Interestingly, the French have been reluctant to join Bush in his selective anti-terror campaign.

Things are beginning to smell just a bit fishy ... wouldn't you agree?

Standards of Success

Can you imagine any event hosted by British nationalists that needed 10,000 police officers to control it, and then saw 158 of its participants arrested and 14 police officers injured, being called "a success"?

Well a success was how the Metropolitan Police newspaper, The Job, described this year's Notting Hill carnival. No murders, no rapes and only a hundred or so muggings and assaults.

For readers who are not aware, the Notting Hill carnival is an event organised by London's Afro-Caribbean community, not a British nationalist group.

That's why the standards of success are so different!

Who Shall We Bomb?

Bush and Blair are determined to continue their roles as world bully and poodle. Having an easy victory in Afghanistan has whetted their appetites for more. To justify their next target, Bush has said that he wants to overthrow a dictator, destroy a country that has weapons of mass destruction, bad human rights record and is a threat to its neighbours.

Bush's intended target is Iraq. But when did Saudi Arabia last have a democratic election? And have not India and Pakistan both been a threat to their neighbours? Don't both of these countries have nuclear weapons? And doesn't Israel have an appalling record of human rights, weapons of mass destruction in the Negev desert and a record of persecuting its neighbours?

Would Bush and Blair bomb them all in the interests of so-called world peace ... THE PEACE OF THE DEAD?

New Labour To Invite Many More Immigrants To Britain

As Britain struggles to contain the invasion of illegal economic migrants from the Third World, the Labour government is planning to admit hundreds of thousands more immigrants to take our jobs, our homes and eventually our country.

With the total of illegal immigrants and bogus asylum seekers already in Britain reaching an estimated one million, and the face of many of our major cities changed beyond recognition, the Labour government plans to further increase immigrant numbers by their own legal means.

Rt Hon Lord Rooker, UK Asylum and Immigration Minister

"Up to two million new immigrants could soon be coming to a town near you!"

Over 35,000 Asians living in Uganda, Kenya, Tanzania and Malawi will, later this year, be given British passports and the right to live and work in Britain. These Asians chose to stay in East Africa when the countries there moved from being part of Britain's colonial empire to becoming fully independent nations.

In many cases the Asians had made themselves extremely unpopular by dominating and manipulating their host nations' economies. Now, fearing the type of mass expulsions practiced by former Ugandan president Idi Amin, many turned to Britain for a safe haven.

The figure of 35,000 only denotes the head of family; the numbers of dependants are not included and could take these numbers up to a quarter of a million!

In addition to this influx, Home Office Minister, Lord Rooker, revealed a unique way of combating illegal immigration into Britain when he unveiled plans to issue tens of thousands of visas to foreign workers giving them the right of entry into Britain as "temporary workers". This will allow them to take work in the construction and catering industries.

Whether Lord Rooker is being naïve in expecting the economic migrants to return home once their visas expire, or whether he is being dishonest in devising a method of turning illegal immigrants into legal ones by the issuing of visas, is a matter of conjecture but you can draw your own conclusions.

A scheme, The Seasonal Agricultural Workers Scheme, already allows up to 20,000 farm workers from Eastern Europe into Britain each year, between April and November, to pick and process farm produce. Of this 20,000, approximately 10 per cent stay on illegally in Britain after the season finishes, the Home Office has admitted.

The cost of supporting asylum seekers has more than doubled from £403 million to £1.052 billion in just one year.

The average cost of each asylum application rose from £9,363 in 200-2001 to £14,523 this year. These figures do not include the legal aid bill of £120 million a year nor do they reflect the extra burden on the health service, schools or the cost of appeals tribunals.

To put these figures into perspective, the amount of money being wasted on asylum seekers could fund 30,000 more policemen, nurses and doctors or build and operate 1,000 extra schools.

The uncertain relationship between India and Pakistan could lead to another invasion of Britain by the 200,000 Asians who have been generously given British passports and the unrestricted right of entry to Britain. Again, this figure only appertains to the "head of household" and a Home Office official admitted in answer to a written question from a concerned MP, that there are contingency plans in place to accommodate up to 1.5 million Asians who have this so-called "legitimate" claim to come to Britain.

Old military bases, disused hospitals, schools and other facilities have been earmarked in readiness for the planned influx of so many people, it was revealed recently.

Oxfordshire

Was the Oxfordshire Gunman an Anti-Fascist Extremist?

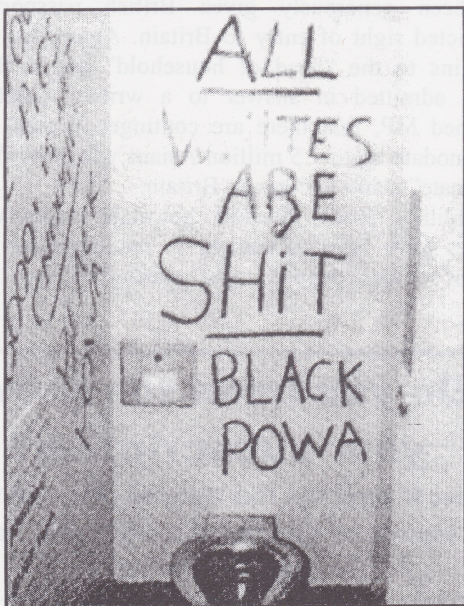

Police investigating anti-white graffiti in Oxfordshire and Warwickshire were shocked when they raided the home of suspect David Tovey and found an arsenal of weapons including a pump-action shotgun, a hand grenade, a WW1 submachine gun, a quantity of PE4 explosive, a handgun and silencer, CS gas, and homemade explosive of the type used by the IRA. The arsenal was hidden in a cupboard with a false bottom.

Immediately, the left-wing media claimed that Tovey was a right-wing extremist who was planning to incite violence between whites and others so as he could emulate the violent activities of the Brixton nail bomber, David Copeland. However, a closer look at the evidence suggests that Tovey was more likely to be an anti-fascist, possibly with links to violent extremists such as AFA or Red Action.

The graffiti included slogans such as "All Whites Are Shit ... Black Power" and "Die White Trade Centre Scum". Not the type of slogans used by white extremists. Also, how many white extremists are married to Chinese women? ... Tovey was! How many white extremists carried on an affair for sixteen years with a woman of Jamaican origin? ... Tovey was!

Oxfordshire police admitted that they found no links with white groups of any kind.

At Oxford Crown Court Tovey pleaded guilty to nine charges of possessing firearms and explosives. He will be sentenced later.

Jews Protest Over Sports Shoe

Sportswear manufacturer UMBRO has apologised to British Jews for calling one of its range of running shoes ZYKLON.

The company agreed to change the name after complaints from the ultra-sensitive Board of Deputies of British Jews and the Beth Shalom Holocaust Centre in Nottinghamshire.

It would appear the Jewish authorities were convinced that the sports trainers were somehow linked to the murder of six million Jews and five million non-Jews in Eastern Europe.

Dr Steven Smith of Beth Shalom was quoted as saying, "Commercial appropriation of words carrying connotations of mass murder is utterly unacceptable".

For readers puzzled by this item we must assume that the objection came about following confusion about the wartime role of the Zyklon brand pest control tablet widely used for fumigation in both Britain and Europe.

Oldham

Despite allegations by anti-fascists that whites were responsible for last summer's rioting in Oldham, several young Asians have been jailed for the attacks. The latest was security guard, Ansar Mahmood, 23, who was caught on CCTV throwing missiles at police officers. Mahmood pleaded guilty and was jailed for three years.

Uproar As NF Launches Campaign in Ballymena

The National Front has deeply disturbed Establishment politicians and the race relations industry by launching a poster and sticker campaign in Ballymena, Northern Ireland, recently. The campaign was designed to gauge support in the area. So positive was the response that the NF hopes to have a local group established in the town before the end of this year.

The National Front is registered in Northern Ireland as a legal political party and intends standing candidates in the next Ulster elections.

Predictably, the Establishment politicians from the pro-Republican SDLP to the Official Ulster Unionists have condemned the entry of the NF into Northern Ireland politics. The NF could cause some embarrassing shocks in the province where all too often the SDLP, Sinn Fein and the UUP have formed a cosy relationship, which has proven not to be in the best interests of the electorate there.

Victory For B&Q Boycott Campaign

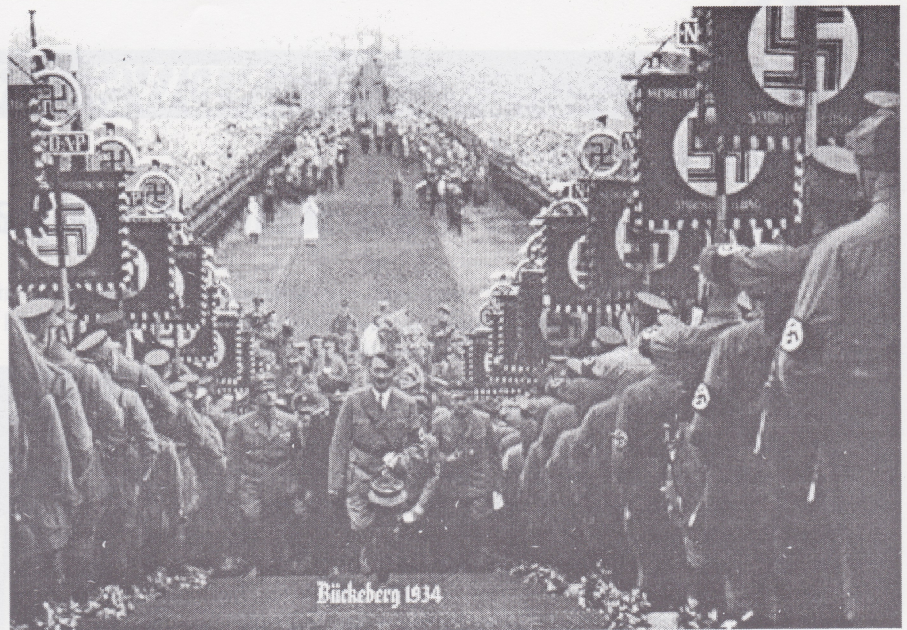

The campaign by nationalists to boycott the B&Q home improvements company over the wrongful dismissal of employee Kevin Scott on political grounds, resulted in a victory after the company agreed to compensate Mr Scott in an out of court settlement.

Mr Scott was dismissed from the B&Q gardening department after he stood as a BNP candidate in a local election. B&Q management rejected an internal appeal against dismissal. They claimed "by becoming a candidate he put his political beliefs into the public arena".

A "Support Kevin Scott - Support Free Speech" campaign was launched and well supported by nationalists and members of the public in the North East.

Thousands of leaflets were distributed outside B&Q stores in the North East. The Scotswood branch, where Mr Scott had worked, was subjected to a regular picket. The National Front even published the names and addresses of B&Q directors on their web site with an invitation to the public to write letters of complaint. With the capitulation of B&Q, the company avoided

BLOOD AND SOIL, THE CORE OF NATIONAL SOCIALIST IDEOLOGY

Adolf Hitler at the Harvest Thanksgiving on the Bückeberg near Hamelin, 1934

As the crisis in the English countryside rages on with, perhaps, tragic consequences from the government's anti-rural policies, it is time we reconsidered the great achievements of National Socialist Germany in the field of agrarian reform and the lessons from which all of Europe can still learn. The slogan "Blood and Soil" (Blut und Boden) was no mere propaganda gimmick but spelled out a deeper mystical faith in the eternal relationship between the peasant (der Bauer) and the God-given resources of the land that he tilled from generation to generation. The belief that only a healthy and strong peasantry could form the living foundation of the people inspired the goal of a National Socialist peasant state ... the agrarian Reich of the future.

For centuries past, the peasant has been the backbone of nations throughout most of Europe. The health and prosperity of the people of these nations could, with true leadership, be assured with the establishment of agricultural communities rooted to the soil ... along with the principle of inheritance as a guarantee of permanence. The European peasantry, and particularly those in Germany, had a permanent relationship with the agricultural life of the nation because theirs was one based on a concept of hereditary ownership of a fixed area of land in a community that was to prove to be the centre of gravity of social stability.

The oldest peasant families were the bastions of rural customs, property and inheritance rights. They were always vigilant and aware of the threats to their customs and, as such, posed a potentially powerful political force in the face of the challenges from urban life and the alien values of the city.

The peasant economic system was in direct conflict with both the capitalist and communist systems for fundamental reasons. It was inextricably linked to family life and, as such, for each member, all the events from birth to death were affected by it. It provided employment, food and housing for each member of the family and so it could not sack its workers, as is the custom of capitalism when the state of the market so dictates or if it suits the enterprise or business.

As for communism, for example, the Bolshevik genocide of the Kulaks, when Trotsky the Red Army leader murdered millions, was the most shameful treatment of the Russian peasantry. Communalising of the land and Stalin's policy of collectivisation posed such a threat to the peasant way of life, that in Germany, Hitler could always depend on support in rural areas during his struggle for power.

More than any economic considerations were the underlying ideological links between the National Socialists and the German peasants. The slogan Blood and Soil was at the core of Hitler's Weltanschauung and can be interpreted as the blood of the peasantry being the most important source from which the renewal of the Germanic racial stock shall expand the nation ... and the soil of the nation, fixed and immutable for all time, tilled by the peasantry to nourish all for the great tasks ahead.

Before 1933, the German peasantry was in grave crisis, so much so that the unbearable conditions could easily have led to revolutionary uprisings from what had long been regarded as a conservative element within the nation.

In 1932-33, agricultural income had fallen to the level of 1913 while the agricultural debt had soared dramatically. This led to an increasing flight from the land to the cities, a recurring rural problem since industrialisation. With a depressed economy the peasant was pushed further to the margins of subsistence. The burden of debt slavery added to the pauperisation of the German peasant. There was also the problem of absorption of farmlands by the big estates, particularly by those of the Junker class, the Prussian aristocracy. It was estimated that by 1930, 50,000 farms had been eliminated since the Great War in the whole of the eastern province of Prussia alone.

To counter these unbearable conditions, the National Socialists first introduced the National Inheritance Law restoring the German peasant to the land and reversing the migratory trend to the cities. All foreign labour, previously Polish and other Slavs, was excluded from participation in agricultural affairs, thus purifying the bloodline of German peasantry and Bauer (peasant) becoming an exclusively honoured Germanic title.

"Back to the land", was the call from Adolf Hitler and his National Socialists. The gradual urbanisation of the countryside and the growth of the populations of the cities was a trend common to all industrialised societies but in Germany the ratio of urban to rural populations had exactly reversed from 30 per cent urban to 70 per cent rural, shifting to 70 per cent urban to 30 per cent rural. To counter this trend, the German National Socialists declared that every peasant must have an estate, defined as farming or forestland in sole possession of the peasant and cultivated by the peasant and his family, of such a minimum size to provide a livelihood.

This policy of rural settlement restored the link between the peasant and the soil and encouraged an essential component of the National Socialist world-view ... the growth of a racially healthy population with a permanent link to the historic past.

The only true communal feeling is that of the rural community because it was agriculture that became the basis of European civilisation and, indeed, of all other civilisations. Before the Industrial Revolution of the nineteenth century the peasantry were that 70 per cent of the population and provided the manhood for a nation's army and the bulk of the nation's taxation.

It is a great tragedy that the real independence of the peasant way of life is now threatened completely by the advance of a sustained industrial growth since 1945 when the migration of peasants from the land became a flood. The National Socialists in Germany did make a magnificent effort to restore that rural ideal and that effort may possibly have been the last that we shall see.

Since the collapse of the Soviet Union we have witnessed the resurgence of "peasant parties" in the Eastern European nations and this may be more of a reaction to the old communist policies of collectivisation. Globalisation will surely put pay to the reconstitution of a peasant way of life in those countries.

The conflict between urban and rural life is one of values. We witness this today with the present brouhaha involving the Countryside Alliance and the government. "Townies do not understand our ways", is the hackneyed response but it is a greater truism than many would like to admit.

The National Socialists knew this only too well and their vision of the "peasant's state" was based on an awareness of these two worlds ... the natural and the unnatural. Hitler's Germany embraced the cause of the peasantry because they found the life values of the German peasants pre-eminently worthwhile and, as such, they made them the cornerstone of the nation's values in the face of a creeping urbanisation.

The city was regarded as unhealthy, this great concrete de-humanising mass where life is culturally sterile. When the peasant leaves the land and migrates to the city he leaves behind his rural heritage and the communal feeling made manifest by the ancient loyalties of hearth and home.

It is summed up in one word, "Mammonism" ... the doctrine of greed and materialism. Whereas the peasant, the tiller of the soil and the producer of sustenance for the nation, enriches the life-blood of the Volk, the urban city-dweller sinks to a lower level, the very reverse of peasant values. The main characteristic of the city-dweller is material greed overshadowing all other considerations, sucking the life-blood and giving back nothing.

To the National Socialists, the money-grubbing and the speculative obsessions of city life are essentially Jewish traits and inventions, contaminating all who come into contact with them. When the peasant loses his inner connections with the soil he joins the directionless and degenerating mass of urban soullessness. As such, the metaphor of a plant dying, as its roots are torn from the soil, best illustrates the process of the death of a nation's soul.

The pointless nature of city life produces class war, cultural death and racial suicide ... and, in all this despair, comes the complete breakdown of values that bolstered the traditions of family and community, so revered in the life of the rural village. The values of the materialistic rich are aped by the proletarian mass of the city ... to get rich quick with the minimum of effort and to worship wealth and property in place of the true worth of the human spirit.

The natural order of society was to be restored through the rebirth of rural life with all labour returning to the land, thereby strengthening the cultural destiny of the true Germanic peoples throughout Europe.

Hitler's Germany was to rest on two pillars ... the peasantry and labour. Both must be rooted to the soil thus restoring the nature-ordered society based on inner worth and talent, hitherto undermined by the divisive class war of the rootless city-dweller corrupted by the degrading doctrines of Marxism.

The rural settlements were to serve the greatest purpose of all. By leading a hard life on the newly settled land, the settlers would transmit the highest racial qualities to their children and their descendants, ensuring the permanence of a fit and healthy peasant stock embracing the values and virtues of a truly Germanic culture.

This was a policy in accord with European traditions and, although disappearing, it is our last link with the past. When it is gone, then it is lost forever.

The Race Trial The Media Forgot

An analysis by Robert Edwards

The long-standing persecution of Colin Jordan and the libertarian printer, Tony Hancock, came to an end in Leeds Crown Court on September 5, 2002. We have absolutely no doubt that those who brought the original and malicious complaints against the defendants were so cock-sure in their roles as public hangmen and manipulators of the judicial process that, for them, verdicts of guilty were foregone conclusions. The Board of Deputies of British Jews has made a practice of acting as the conscience of the Jewish community in Britain and grabs any opportunity to complain of racism ... and also, in their particular case, to smear any of anti-Semitism. Nearly every major case of this nature brought before the courts has been instigated by the Board of Deputies.

For what you are about to read may you be truly thankful, for none of it was reported in the national press in what was a blatant conspiracy of silence. It was not reported because the defendants were not convicted of the charges ... one granted conditional leave from attending court on grounds of ill-health and the other, accused of aiding and abetting, being acquitted.

One commentator greeted Mr Hancock's acquittal at the time as "a victory for free speech" but in light of the blanket of silence by ALL of the media it would appear to be a hollow victory ... for what is a victory if you can not shout it from the rooftops?

We have no doubt that if the two gentlemen involved were now languishing in other accommodation at Her Majesty's pleasure then the entire Zionist-friendly media would have been more than generous with the printer's ink and equally less restrained and judicious with their braying. As it is, we witnessed something truly astonishing. There is a subject the Jews are terrified of releasing into the public domain, or at least that of the non-Jewish public. It is any mention of the historical record of commentaries known as the Talmud. For those less au fait with this Jewish tome, the Talmud consists of some frighteningly anti-Gentile pronouncements, verging on the pornographic ... and what is more, it is still being printed and published.

Of the two items deemed as being "incitement to racial hatred", Mr Jordan's leaflet "Jack Straw's Jewish Justice", was to prove the main target of the Jews. Published in 1998 and aimed at a Jewish Home Secretary, the gist of the two-page leaflet compared the persecution of British patriots for the most innocuous and contentious examples of "racial abuse" with some extracts from the Talmud, specifically "the Hebrew-English edition of the Babylonian Talmud, printed and published by the Soncino Press Ltd, 20 Cambridge Terrace, Gateshead NE8 1RP.

As my article is a fair and accurate report, I claim the defence of public interest when I bring certain passages contained in the Talmud to the attention of the reader who has acquired League Sentinel through subscription only.

In the form of a cutout coupon for the purposes of petitioning, Mr Jordan produced two examples of Jewish thoughts on Gentiles. From Abodah Zarah 22a: "One should not place cattle in heathens' inns because they are suspected of immoral practices with them". Then from Abodah Zarah 22b: "Why then should we not leave female animals alone with female heathens?" – said Mar 'Ukba b. Hama.

"Because heathens frequent their neighbours' wives, and should one by chance not find her in, and find the cattle there, he might use it immorally. You may also say that even if he should find her in he might use the animal. As a Master has said, heathens prefer the cattle of Israelites to their own wives".

Now that is tame stuff compared to many other extracts from the Talmud I have gleaned from other sources. Therein you would find references to paedophilia and more bestiality, punishments involving boiling semen and God knows what else... all highly offensive to Gentiles. Mr Jordan simply meant to bring to the attention of the gullible goyim the fact that this book is "the paramount book of guidance and inspiration for Jews, stocked and distributed today by Jewish booksellers". He felt that Gentiles should be made aware of this. The Board of Deputies obviously thinks otherwise.

After Mr Jordan was deemed medically unfit (he is an eighty year old gentleman with a heart condition) to attend court, with the preposterous condition that he ceases all political activity, the printer, Tony Hancock, was left to carry the can, so to speak. Now handled very ably by the barrister, Adrian Davies, the course of the defence proceedings took an unexpected turn.

The defence adopted an aggressive stance on the issue of the printing and publishing of "Jack Straw's Jewish Justice". Mike Whine, the Defence Director of the Board of Deputies of British Jews, took the stand for the prosecution and on being cross-examined by Adrian Davies on the subject of the filthy content of the Talmud was seen to grip the witness box so tight that his knuckles turned white and both his arms trembled violently. All that was missing was a wailing and a gnashing of teeth.

It was this more determined and resolute approach that unnerved the Jews in their attempt to silence and eventually incarcerate Messrs Jordan and Hancock. Above all, these passages from the Talmud are, by their revolting nature, utterly indefensible and, when the tables are turned, a more fitting subject for a case of prosecution under Britain's race hate laws.

They saw this coming, hence the press boycott and the total absence, on a daily basis, of anyone in the press gallery.

The judge also directed that the charge of “publishing” in relation to the leaflet, “Jack Straw’s Jewish Justice”, be dropped on the grounds that there was not a shred of evidence produced by the prosecution that a single leaflet had actually been distributed ... distributing being the sole criterion for actual publishing.

This left the other publication, “Merrie England 2000”, as the final item on which the prosecution case hinged. This booklet was published in 1993, hence the futuristic title, and, at that time, it was only considered for prosecution and then the idea dropped because books were regarded as being in a different category to leaflets and broadsheets. The principle being that the reading of a book is a domestic activity carried out in privacy and seclusion. Leaflets and newspapers constitute street activity and, as such, are publicly distributed for that purpose.

By the time the leaflet attacking Home Secretary Jack Straw came out in 1998 and the references to the Talmud deemed by some to be abusive and threatening, it was decided to dredge up “Merrie England 2000” and throw it into the pot for good measure as well. This satirical booklet is illustrated with racial cartoons (see above right) signed by the multi-talented “Wolf Hook” and is an acknowledged work of fiction, hypothesising a nightmare scenario whereby the white population languishes under the cosh of multi-racial political correctness.

After the judge’s summing up on the day after the charge concerning the Jack Straw leaflet was dropped, the jury returned a unanimous verdict of not guilty in regard to Mr Hancock’s alleged role as a publisher of “Merrie England 2000”, albeit in his acknowledged role as a printer.

In his submissions in defence of Mr Hancock, Adrian Davies drew on Article 10 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (1953). For example: “Everyone has the right to freedom of expression. This right shall include freedom to hold opinions and to receive and impart information and ideas ...”

From Article 14 of the Convention, Mr Davies pointed out that the article “prohibits discrimination against persons holding racist opinions ... [and] if it is indeed the case that the Talmud contains passages which stir up hatred of Gentiles, and its publishers are not prosecuted ... that would be impermissible discrimination ...”

Mr Davies further pointed out that the prosecution’s condemnation of Mr Jordan’s opinion that multiculturalism “is loathsome” is “an opinion which is not illegal either to hold or to promote”. Prosecution references to Mr Jordan’s “warped persuasions” were condemned as inflammatory and politicised language.

Section 19 (2) of The Public Order Act (Defence) was used and proven to show that Mr Hancock, as a printer, “was not personally familiar with the contents of ‘Merrie England 2000’ and ‘Jack Straw’s Jewish Justice’ and ought on that account be acquitted”.

Those familiar with Section 19 (2) of the Public Order Act of 1986 will be aware of that exceptional defence.

Postscript: NEWS FROM THE LOONEY BIN

One of the few smaller publications to mention the trial at Leeds Crown Court was Gerry Gable’s pernicious journal, Searchlight. In the October issue he once again reports from the sewers, introducing himself as someone so important that he has “a couple of European governments” in his pocket. Get away!

Gable’s mental health (see left) should be cause for serious concern to his associates as he continues to tell us that he even “argues with government ministers”. Remember when he told the Attorney General to “get off his backside”? He also claims it was Searchlight that campaigned all along “for decades” for the prosecution of a certain libertarian printer down in Sussex.

The fact is, it was the Board of Deputies of British Jews that brought the complaint against Colin Jordan and Tony Hancock, with Gable being roped in later to give statements of complaint to the police. He only managed to wangle a minor position on the Advisory Panel of the Met’s Racial and Violent Crimes Task Force at the invitation of Assistant Commissioner John Grieve. Now that Grieve has departed we wonder how the enigmatic Cressida Dick is coping. Give us a ring, dear! © RHE

Holland Joins Fight Back Against Bogus Asylum Seekers

The recent election of four ministers from the anti-immigration Lijst Pim Fortuyn (LPF) party into a coalition government is already showing dividends for the Dutch people. The new Immigration Minister, Hilbrand Nawijn, a member of the LPF, has unveiled plans to stop bogus asylum seekers from exploiting Dutch generosity.

Before the election, Mr Nawijn was the head of the Dutch Immigration Service and is well aware of the damage bogus asylum seekers and illegal immigrants are doing to Dutch cultural and economic aspects of life.

New proposals will include plans to detain all prospective immigrants and asylum seekers in disused military barracks for up to two months while their applications to stay are considered. If their applications are rejected they will be deported immediately. Social security payments to applicants will be cut by 90%.

Immigrants currently housed in social (council) housing will be evicted and housed in the camps. Mr Nawijn said, "This housing was intended for Dutch citizens who cannot afford to buy their own ... we must put our own people first".

Another important part of the plan is to fine employers who hire illegal immigrants £1,350 for every illegal employed. This move has been welcomed by some Dutch trade unions that have long been concerned that immigrants having been taking jobs from Dutch workers and working for lower rates of pay.

Other measures include compulsory Dutch language and citizenship classes for all those wishing to live permanently in the Netherlands and much tighter restrictions on bringing in relatives from abroad.

Illegal immigrants to the Netherlands normally come from Turkey, Morocco and other parts of North Africa. Official figures show that most crimes of shoplifting and mugging were being committed by illegal immigrants from these countries.

A Dutch colleague told League Sentinel, "They may have murdered Pym [Fortuyn] but his message goes on. Enough is enough! We are taking our country back".

Austria

Members of the nationalist Freedom Party of Austria (FPÖ) have announced that they are resigning from the Austrian coalition government, forcing Chancellor Wolfgang Schüssel to call an early General Election. The resignations will give the opportunity for the Freedom Party's charismatic leader, Jörg

Jörg Haider, charismatic leader of Austria's Freedom Party (Freiheitspartei Österreich)

Haider, to re-enter the political arena. Herr Haider expected a challenge for overall leadership of the party from his deputy and vice-chancellor, Susanne Riess-Passer, at the forthcoming party congress. But now she has resigned, Herr Haider expects to recapture the leadership unopposed.

The General Election is expected to be held in November, almost a year early. The Freedom Party has been part of the government for two years after winning 27% of the vote. Latest polls suggest that support has slipped to about 20%. Herr Haider is convinced that he can soon recover the lost support with an election manifesto opposing the proposed expansion of the European Union. Also promising to take a much tougher line on illegal immigrants and asylum seekers.

Thousands March In Memory of Rudolf Hess

Wunsiedel, Bavaria - August 17th, 2002

Almost 4,000 European nationalists marched through the town of Wunsiedel in Bavaria to commemorate the fifteenth anniversary of the murder of Rudolf Hess.

In 1987, persons unknown murdered Hitler's former deputy in the grounds of Spandau Prison. "Prisoner No 7", as he came to be known, had served 46 years in Spandau at the time of his death. In an astonishing cover up his death was officially declared as "suicide".

Marchers from Germany, Austria, Italy, Sweden, Belgium, France, Switzerland, Holland, Estonia, Finland, Sweden, Denmark and Britain came to pay their respects to the man who sacrificed his freedom, and ultimately his life, in the cause of European peace.

The marchers were greeted with applause from hundreds of townsfolk who had gathered to watch the march.

Some 300 communists and Jewish students tried unsuccessfully to disrupt the annual event and about a dozen of these were arrested for drunkenness and breaches of the peace.

Fury Over Literary Prize Winner

A storm of protest erupted from left-wing Germans and leading members of the Jewish community when it was announced that historian Ernst Nolte had won the annual Konrad Adenauer Prize for Literature.

The award is Germany's most prestigious literary prize, past winners of which include ex-Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

The historian, Ernst Nolte, is a controversial figure in Germany because of his assertions that National Socialism was rational and simply a riposte to Bolshevism.

Herr Nolte used his acceptance speech to further expand on his theory by saying, "We should leave behind the view that the opponents of National Socialism were always good and right. National Socialism was the strongest of all of the counter forces to Bolshevism, a movement with a wide Jewish support. Hitler may have had rational reasons for attacking the Jews".

Dr Horst Möller, the director of the distinguished Institute of Contemporary History, presented the award to Herr Nolte.

Dr Möller praised the exceptionally high standard of Herr Nolte's work and used his presentation speech to condemn "those who made hate-filled and defamatory attempts to stop open debate in Germany".

Switzerland

Swiss voters have rejected a plan to create a foundation to help victims of the Holocaust. The foundation was proposed in 1997 by the then President Arnold Koller as an attempt to deflect allegations by world Jewish organisations that Switzerland had financially assisted Germany during the war and had been hoarding money belonging to Holocaust survivors.

Since then the Swiss government has succumbed to the bullying and blackmail by various Jewish groups and paid out 1.25 billion US dollars in settlement of claims by those alleging to be Holocaust survivors.

The plan for a separate Holocaust foundation was defeated in a referendum.

A leading Swiss politician praised the rejection saying, "The Swiss people have been blackmailed enough".

MOSLEY ON THE IRISH QUESTION

From the Black and Tans to Re-drawing the Border

Sir Oswald Mosley's first impression of Ireland was as a young officer in the 16th Lancers stationed at the Curragh (the Aldershot of Ireland) near Dublin in October 1914. Only a few months earlier, officers of the 16th Lancers had mutinied at the Curragh in support of Sir Edward Carson's Ulster Volunteer Force and the fight for maintaining the union with Britain, culminating in the establishment of a Protestant state in "the wee North", as opposed to a Roman Catholic state in the South. British Army officers were overwhelmingly Unionist by conviction and many were Ulstermen.

The next episode involving Ireland in Mosley's life occurred at the beginning of his Parliamentary career. On November 3 1920, with Lord Henry Bentinck, Mosley crossed the floor of the Commons in protest at the government's use of the Black and Tans in Ireland. Much has been made of this episode by Irish Republican sympathisers with the result that some have been misled by the notion that Mosley entertained sympathies for the IRA and Sinn Fein. This is far from the actualité.

Mosley's opposition to the Black and Tans was one based on a singular and simple principle ... it was to do with methods and their effectiveness. Nothing else.

He referred to Sinn Fein "murder gangs" with as equal contempt as he reserved for those who used similar methods against a civilian population. Indeed, his opposition to Lloyd George's Irish policy was based purely on practicalities ... he insisted that only with a good intelligence service "should it be possible to round up the murder gangs without recourse to terrorism of one's own", as stated in an interview with him in December 1920.

This guerrilla war had started after the IRA had burned down 315 Royal Irish Constabulary barracks on the fourth anniversary of the Easter Rising of 1916. The British response was to recruit unemployed British ex-servicemen as a complementary force to assist the R.I.C. With their dark caps and khaki tunics they were dubbed the Black and Tans. They were not "the dregs of English jails" as Sinn Fein propaganda popularised a false myth but experienced soldiers from the trenches of the Great War.

An additional force, the Auxiliaries, consisted of a different breed, described as ex-officers of "the gentleman-adventurer, Freikorps type" whose mobility in the countryside wreaked most havoc, bearing in mind that the tactics of the IRA had put an end to conventional warfare and most influenced this change in military tactics.

Many former Black and Tans were to join Mosley's British Union of Fascists in the 1930s. After all said, William Joyce was a self-confessed Black and Tan informer in his youth in Ireland. Mosley objected to the uses these men were put to by the government of the day but actually admired them as the buccaneers with whom he could so easily identify later.

When Lloyd George's government caved in, signed a truce followed by a peace treaty establishing a united Ireland (with the exception of Ulster), Michael Collins remarked, "You had us dead beat, we could not have lasted another three weeks ... we thought you must have gone mad".

For all said about them, the Black and Tans would have won the day, as Collins acknowledged.

In Mosley's post-war Union Movement there was little emphasis on this episode in his career. "Ireland's Right To Unite" was a slogan rarely used but it did appear in some propaganda literature. By 1971, however, when Mosley was attempting a breakthrough into mainstream politics after the publication of My Life, he declared his true position in a Broadsheet article entitled, 'The Irish Problem: Interim and Ultimate Solutions', published on October 8 that year.

The interim solution, he declared, was a re-drawing of the border that would exclude the largely Roman Catholic enclaves in places like

South Armagh with the effect that Northern Ireland would be more solidly Protestant. These enclaves would be ceded to the Republic in the South, which is where they want to be, so ending a long grievance. It would rob the IRA of one of its most fertile recruiting grounds and could have prevented the needless murder of so many of our own young British soldiers.

Mosley's Broadsheet on Ireland offered the ultimate solution within the framework of a united Europe. This solution was one that could apply to many regional grievances, including the Flemish and Walloons in Belgium, the Basques in Spain, the Bretons in France ... and so on. A union of All Europeans would ensure the preservation of the identities in the regions. Mosley advocated a regional government with full powers in Belfast for one million Protestants. Both Dublin and Belfast would have direct access at all times to a European government in which they would both discover a wider and more meaningful sense of national unity than they ever had. After all, Ireland had only ever been united under British rule and would again be united within European Union, albeit as regions.

Mosley was far from being a Republican sympathiser. In his 1971 Broadsheet he called for the total militarization of the border with blockhouses and wire, helicopters and mobile weaponry to keep terrorists out. He called for a well-paid and properly equipped National Police Force on the streets of Northern Ireland under a strong state that would defeat terrorism. The troubles in Northern Ireland are far from over and the ages-old conflict continues within the two main cultures, with or without the ceasefires.

Anti-Semitism and the Anti-War Camp

In The Sunday Times of October 20, Andrew Sullivan reveals a political trend within American academia that has set alarm bells ringing throughout the Jewish world. A direct consequence of the "war against terrorism" is the increasingly vocal condemnation of Israel. In the Yale Daily News, the organ of the elite university, an article was published commenting on a forum on the Israeli/Palestinian issue. It stated, "There was a heated exchange when the pro-Israeli side initiated the "anti-Semite" slur. I am sick and tired of Jewish people always smearing those that merely disagree with their views as "evil" ... I never thought I'd say this but a lot of what the so-called "white supremacists" are saying is proving more accurate than I feel comfortable admitting". Many American universities have called for a withdrawal of investments in Israel, in what is for all intents and purposes a boycott of the Jewish state.

One of the most influential critics of Israel in this time is Israel Shamir, an Israeli writer living in Jaffa. Shamir follows in the tradition of Noam Chomsky and the late Israel Shahak, the tradition of the anti-Zionist Jew lending total sympathy to the plight of the Palestinians and condemning his erstwhile fellow Jews into the bargain.

But, like Shahak, it is more than a humane empathy for the underdog in the Middle East. Their dissent is one based on a rejection of Judaism and everything understood to be "Jewish".

It is a matter of grave concern to the Zionist warmongers that what is deemed as "anti-Semitic" rhetoric is most effectively articulated by those of Jewish origin.

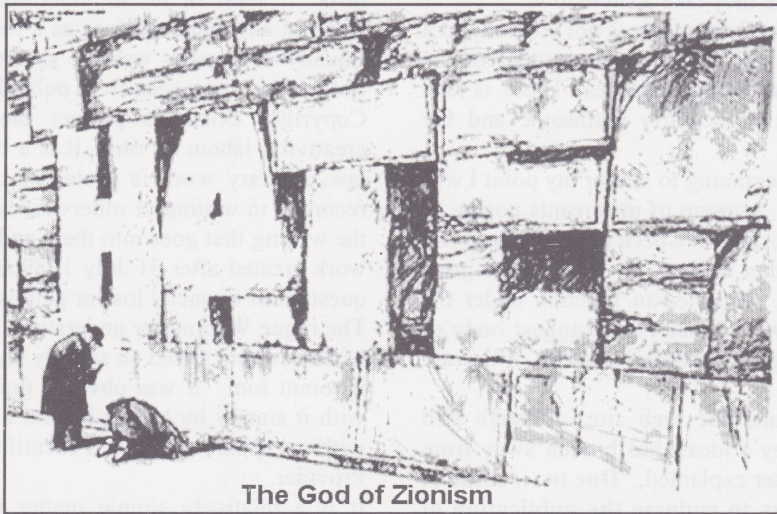

Andrew Sullivan refers to the conflict against "Islamofascism", a newly invented epithet in the Zionist propaganda lexicon coined for the express purpose of linking Muslims with fascist aspirations. Sullivan claims that the fanatical anti-Semitism of these "Islamofascists" is even worse than Hitler's and, with an abuse of journalistic license, claims it is the cultural norm in most of the Middle East.

Israel Shamir will have none of this and boldly attacks what he describes as "the mighty Jewish propaganda machine, this globe-embracing conglomerate of Jewish media moguls, obedient journalists and deferential university professors".

Attacking the anti-Muslim propaganda spewed out by the Jews, he questions the authenticity of Jewish claims that Muslims [4 per cent of the population] are committing most of the rapes in Denmark. Shamir responds, "But my Jewish brothers [2 per cent of the population] constitute the majority of people who screw all of us".

He goes on, "Now when we know the statistics of Muslim applications for welfare, let us see the statistics of Jewish fraud. I doubt all Muslim welfare addicts can compare with one Mark Rich".

Shamir is not averse to the use of frightening metaphor that would otherwise have had any self-respecting goy dragged before a court on the charge of a "hate crime". He writes of a spectre haunting the West. "Exorcised long ago, it was imprisoned in the dark lab like a deadly virus", he says ...

The God of Zionism

Accusing Israel of the most foul of crimes he concludes that the old myths of well-poisoning in the Middle Ages are not fantasies but have become true. The "spectre" has been released after the breaking of seals and the removal of the magic pentagram ... suggestive of cabbalistic chicanery. He quotes the case of the Jew, Abba Kovna, whose ambition was to poison the source of the Rhine with the potentially tragic consequences of millions of German dead ... men, women and children. Kovna lacked the guts for such an outrage after a future President of Israel had supplied the deadly substance.

The new hate potion is as deadly as any other kind. The hate potion comes in the form of anti-Gentilism and the hatred of the goyim now openly expressed in the Jewish-controlled media. Anti-Islamic propaganda is one of many strands to this campaign, as Shamir points out.

The attitude of Jews towards both Christians and Muslims throughout history has been one of malevolence. Shamir reminds us that the Jews quite pragmatically co-operated with the victorious Arab armies in North Africa and Spain when the first Arab Empire was established. They did so because they knew they would be guaranteed the tolerance and protection of the Arab rulers. Unfortunately, the Jews have not been known to reciprocate such civilised hospitality when they seize the advantage.

On Tuesday, October 8, Israel Shamir proudly proclaimed that he was received into the orthodox Mother Church of the Holy Land and pronounced himself a Palestinian Christian.

In this proclamation he recounts the liberating effects of discarding his "Jewishness" in the home church of the local Arab-speaking community. The name of Israel (the father of the Jews) is replaced with Adam (the father of all men) and after baptism and anointment he recalls the joy of stepping out into the open air to join his Palestinian brothers and sisters.

Shamir continues writing as an anti-Zionist journalist and writes with an authority that many would envy and certainly a lot more will fear. The war for Palestine is a global war in which the enemies of Zionism must unite. © RHE

Copyright: Thou Shalt Not Steal

I have always been in favour of the Saudi Arabian practice of chopping off the right hand for thieving but then I am told there are few amputees in the Middle Eastern kingdoms because the threat of losing a hand is such an effective deterrent, proving that the practice is not entirely motivated by sadism. On the other hand, taking without the owner's consent is now regarded in the West as being almost the accepted norm with the erstwhile owner taking the blame for his own negligence. After all, he should have nailed it down to prevent such understandable temptation.

Imagine working hard for hours at a time, forsaking the fleshpots and the lure of the dens of iniquity, to have what you have crafted and created through skill, labour and judgement lifted by the lazy and idle simply because they take a shine to it.

The vice of expropriating another's property is not confined to a particular class of person and nor is it always a matter of the redistribution of wealth for altruistic purposes. There is one particular act of theft that is particularly loathsome and the perpetrators even more so.

Before the reader thinks I am beginning to labour my point I will come to the fact of the matter. A group of miscreants posing as disciples of the late Oswald Mosley have been running a web site on the Internet that not altogether reflects the spirit of the great man. Previously, the web site purported to function under the auspices of the Friends of Oswald Mosley, that august body of gentlemen dedicated to keeping the memory and ideas of Oswald Mosley before the public gaze.

This is no longer the case and the web site, although still ostensibly a vehicle for Mosley's ideas, has broken away from FOM because, as the Webmaster explained, "Due to ... some of FOM members' unwillingness to endorse the publication of recent articles in 'Action News' the web site is no longer associated with FOM". It's my ball and I'm not playing anymore! The Webmaster does not elaborate but some of the pro-Irish Republican sentiments expressed on the site in recent years point to a possible bone of contention. The shenanigans of an exposed Searchlight agent have also been mooted as a factor. An ugly shock awaited the scribblers and scribes of League Sentinel, however. At the very time the pro-Fenians of what is now a rogue web site were rubbing FOM up the wrong way, we discovered they had half-inched one of our literary labours of love to adorn one of their web pages without so much as a by your leave. They were clearly infringing copyright law and the editor of League Sentinel, along with the author whose copyright it remains, contacted the web site requesting immediate removal of the offending item.

When anyone is caught bang to rights it is customary to accept responsibility for one's actions there and then. Well, with normal people that is the case. Not so with the literary kleptomaniacs of the rogue web site now floating rudderless through the ether of the Information Highway, apparently without a captain or a port to call in. Their flag now is obviously the Jolly Roger and literary piracy the order of the day.

The quality of the content of this web site had been declining for some time, as the editor of this publication pointed out to them, and it was obvious they had problems stringing a few words together to make a coherent sentence. In their desperation they reverted to thieving.

Their response to our request to remove my article from their web site was Machiavellian in the extreme. The Webmaster replied, "The Internet is a relatively free and democratic medium, and we certainly have no intention of undermining the spirit of Internet publishing by restricting ourselves to what would seem to be the limitations of antiquated UK copyright laws ... least of all to individuals who have not apparently suffered any financial loss as a result of any such publication". Equally outrageous was the statement, "Mr Edwards should be flattered we have seen fit to publish his material at all".

Copyright exists to protect the product of people's skill, creativity, labour or time. It is a branch of intellectual property law. Literary work is protected by copyright as soon as it is recorded in writing or otherwise and it includes newspapers and the writing that goes into them and the first owner of a copyright work created after 31 July 1989 is the author. Furthermore, the question of financial loss or gain is neither here nor there.

The rogue Webmaster understood neither the letter nor the spirit of the law and sailed on smugly and with the complacency of the ignorant fool. It was obvious that he thought he had got away with it simply by hiding behind a domain name on the Internet with no apparent outward identification of his Internet Service Provider.

It is a relatively simple matter to obtain all the background details of a web site ... if you know how. This one was particularly easy to obtain and our complaint elicited the knowledge that the "limitations of our antiquated UK copyright laws" were taken very seriously by this web site's service provider and a very helpful Mr Ashmore of the technical department assured us over the telephone that this web site had seven days to remove my article or face shut-down. It was removed within twenty-four hours.

Unsurprisingly, we have heard no more from our pro-Irish Republican Webmaster or his few chums. No doubt he is very busy dealing with the millions of visitors his site receives on a daily basis, although his last attempt at a "forum" consisted of the same three or four illiterates debating the appropriate time to wear a black shirt as a political uniform. The inanity of this "chat room", as they are so euphemistically termed, must have been so cringingly embarrassing to the more erudite sponsors of the web site that it was closed down on at least three occasions.

The claim by the Webmaster (and I quote with the original punctuation), "that the web site is NOT [his caps] and never has been owned or controlled by the Friends of Oswald Mosley. FOM does not, and never has had, any editorial control over the web site, and does not and has not, had any final say in ... ad infinitum, ad nauseum", can only be a great relief to the good gentlemen of the FOM because now they are aware of the true nature of these unprincipled individuals so given to notions that stealing the work of others has something to do with freedom and democracy.

At the least, it is a matter of good manners to first ask, one of the first lessons for a child. At the worst, well how do you fancy walking about minus your right hand?
